PEASLEE CASE NEARS THE JURY

"You pointed out Peaslee the black hand note, didn't you?"

"Yes, and as soon as she saw it she said, 'That's none of my work all right.'"

Peaslee testified that his horse and she recognized the drawn black hand and the words "work" as a characteristic of one Wood.

The most important witness for the State's relative was Mr. Francis J. McDonald, wife of Albert R. McDonald, the detective agency superior who was the star witness for the prosecution.

GRILL Mrs. McDonald.

Like her husband she told no story, never changing. She was cross-examined by Peaslee's chief counsel, Nathaniel Martin. His cross-examination was severe at times, but Mrs. McDonald never flinched.

Her direct examination by Robert V. Niverville was an incident.

Q—The second time you and Mrs. Peaslee went to see the detective at Portland, who made the suggestion?

A—Mrs. Peaslee.

Q—Were you present when the girl came home from her visit to the detective?

A—Yes.

Q—What was said to you by Mrs. Peaslee after you went upstairs that night?

A—Mrs. Peaslee and I were talking about the elevator.

Q—Did you hear Mrs. Peaslee and Morrison talking about his visit to the elevator?

A—Yes, I continued their conversation.

Q—What did Mrs. Peaslee say to her husband?

A—She asked him if he had the elevator who she (Mrs. Peaslee) had asked him.

Mrs. Kelly Wins Point in Court Over Al Adams

New York, Jan. 7.—Mrs. Helen M. Kelly, mother-in-law of "Al" Davis, the cabaret dancer, who joined with her husband, dancer, Al Adams, in a recent party suit victory over Davis, the $10,000 slander suit brought against Mrs. Kelly by the dancer was practically quashed when Justice Hutchins sustained two demurrers to the complaint.

Davis must pay court costs before he can rectify the errors in the complaint. The court described the errors as glaring.

The dancer asked the Supreme Court to award him $10,000 against Mrs. Kelly. He alleged that she had defamed him by statements she is alleged to have made regarding his character.

The conversation of which he complained was alleged to have taken place while he was clandestinely visiting Eugenia at Mackinac, Mich. He claimed his mother-in-law accused him of having knowledge of a missing diamond pin.

The slander suit was merely one of many tempestuous episodes in the courtship of Davis and Miss Kelly.

A. K. READING OF CAMBRIDGE INDICTED

Still active with the charges made in his recent municipal campaign.

An indictment reported by the Grand Jury and growing out of the city election was that against Patrick Sullivan, a Harvard square tailor. He is indicted for alleged criminal libel, it being claimed that he had a placard in his window during the campaign reflecting on Alderman David G. Crowley, defeated on a recount by 24 votes for alderman.

When reading came before Judge Raymond, Major Robert C. Crowley of District Attorney William J. Crowley's office, told the court that he wished to have James J. H. read for the trial of Attorney Reading and of Herbert B. Harris, another Cambridge lawyer. Several weeks ago the reviewing grand jury indicted both Reading and Harris. The latter for alleged registration fraud in twenty-eight counts.

In reply to Crowley's motion Attorney Reading said:

"I have just been through an arduous campaign in Cambridge and I had no time to devote to my defense. I had to get time in my defense, they being Harris and Crowley were away for the holiday period. I feel therefore that a week is rather short notice for me to prepare my case."

PORTY TRUE BILL

Major Crowley said that the first indictment against Reading and Harris had been returned six weeks ago and that he thought they had had plenty of time to prepare their case. Judge Raymond thereupon set the trial for Jan. 12.

The grand jury today returned indictments and two no-bills.

Indictments were returned against David H. Harris, Samuel H. Harris, and Charles H. Harris, charged with reading a placard from James A. McFarlane, a lawless politician, on the West Boston bridge.

Charles H. Harris, nineteen, of Boston, was indicted for manslaughter in connection with the death of his father, William H. Harris. It is charged that on November 21, 1914, Harris beat his stepfather with a baseball bat.

The Leslie brothers, John T. and Herbert C. of Lowell, were each indicted in three counts for conspiracy and twenty-three counts for larceny in connection with shortages at the West Boston bridge.

They were arraigned on the indictment as both pleaded not guilty.

SEEK MISSING BROKER IN BOSTON

Miller for advice as to the handling of the estate.

At the lowest calculation the value of the securities turned over to Miller was $250,000. Besides the traction electric and gas stock, there were also two shares of Providence and Washington Insurance company stock. This stock, Andrews fears, has gone the way of the other stocks and been sold by Miller.

REWARD OFFERED.

William F. Andrews, son of William Andrews, has offered a reward of $100 for the apprehension of the brother, taken place while he was clandestinely visiting Eugenia at Mackinac, Mich. He claimed his mother-in-law accused him of having knowledge of a missing diamond pin.

The slander suit was merely one of many tempestuous episodes in the courtship of Davis and Miss Kelly.

RESIGNED FROM VESTRY.

Miller was formerly a clerk in the office of his brother's firm, Miller & Vaughn, which failed for $100,000 several years ago. He has been widely known in politics for a number of years and took after his customer's interests.

Mark-Down SALE and do better

The many advertising claims and counter-claims appearing in the papers lately relative to clothing prices must be rather confusing to some folks—especially to those not familiar with the various stores, their merchandise, and their methods.

If you are at all in doubt, just compare values before you buy anything anywhere. We invite comparisons—and thrive upon them. We let the public be both judge and jury and we're perfectly willing to rest our case on the merits of our merchandise and prices, entirely confident of what the verdict will be.

We round out the second week of this Complete Clearance Mark-Down Sale with no lessening of the extraordinary money-saving opportunities and with practically as good a variety to choose from as at the start.

Come any day this week and bring your friends along, too

The Governor's Message

THE political year of 1915 for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts closed at the booming of the cannon at 12 o'clock yesterday. Governor Walsh, under whose leadership the government of the State has been conducted for two years, retired at noon yesterday under circumstances that must be exceedingly gratifying not only to himself, but to all who supported him for Governor.

Now, when the heat of partisanship is cool and men can render calm and disinterested judgment, it is safe to say that very few intelligent citizens of Massachusetts reviewing Governor Walsh's record of two years in office, will not feel obliged, and will not be glad, to say to Governor Walsh: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and several hundred thousand citizens will undoubtedly feel like adding the farewell of the song, "Say au revoir, but not good-bye."

Governor McCall put his hand to the plow the moment his predecessor released it. His inaugural address gives us an inkling of the kind of work he proposes to do and the depth of soil he intends to turn over.

He has given the question of the Constitutional Convention the first importance in his address. In this fact lies the evidence that he understands the proportions of the obligation which rests upon him. A Constitutional Convention which shall give the people of Massachusetts an opportunity to conform their constitution EXACTLY to their wishes, is the first and highest pledge which Governor McCall and the Republican party made during the last campaign.

That Mr. McCall intends that the word of promise shall be kept, both to the ear and to the hope, is evident from his recommendations with respect to the Constitutional Convention. He wants the Convention to be held in the spirit of our former Constitutional Conventions, and without the dishonest features that condemned the Constitutional Convention which New York recently held and which buried under its ruins the Presidential aspirations of its chief figure, Elihu Root.

Mr. McCall urges a call for a Constitutional Convention that shall undertake to consider changes in all parts of our Constitution except the Bill of Rights and the judiciary. The suggestion of omitting the judiciary and the Bill of Rights from consideration is founded merely upon the fact that there has been no popular demand for any change in these parts of the organic law. But Mr. McCall does not hesitate to submit these parts also to consideration if, as a matter of law, they must be submitted with the rest.

He recommends that the great controversial questions which have agitated the State for a score of years, and which will not down until they have been passed upon by the people, shall be submitted separately to the citizens of Massachusetts. This is the most important feature of an honest Constitutional Convention. If the people get no opportunity to reject or adopt the great changes which have been wrought in the organic laws of other progressive countries and other States of our union, unless the Constitutional Convention merely give them that opportunity, then we shall be no better off than the people of New York were under Ruler's crooked, corporation-controlled convention. And Governor McCall and the Republican majority of the Legislature would suffer as much loss of prestige as did Root and his playthings in the New York Constitutional Convention.

The selection of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention, Mr. McCall, according to his pledge, recommends to be without party designation. But it ought to be provided, however, that the candidates for the Convention may declare their attitude on certain questions in which the public would have an interest. For instance, if a man believes in the short ballot, he should say so against his name. The great failure of our representative government has been that we have tried to select men and not measures. We have elected masters and not servants. They have not represented us, but represented themselves in our law-making bodies.

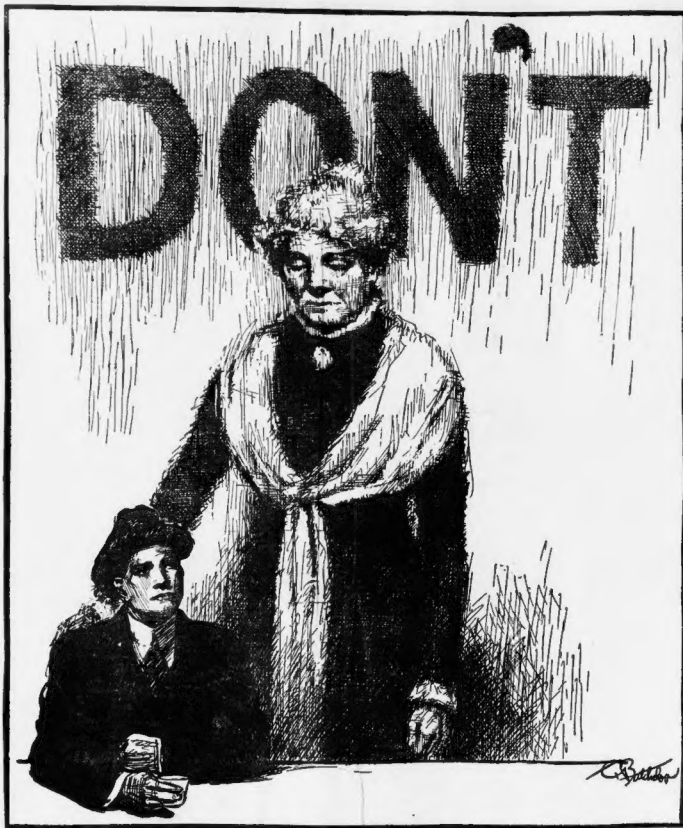

Mr. McCall has also recommended wisely that a goodly number of delegates be elected at large from the State and Commonwealth. This would insure, as it does in England, the selection of good men who by reason of local conditions, might be excluded from the Convention if the selection were made wholly from the localities in which they happen to live.

Thus Governor McCall's message to the people of Massachusetts on the most important matter which will come before the State during his term is sound and worthy of the highest praise. It gives us all a good feeling concerning the Governor as he stands up upon his great, new task. However many difficulties he may meet in other directions, if he succeeds in giving us an honest Constitutional Convention which shall afford the people an opportunity to speak their mind on the great questions which have agitated the State in the last decade or two, he will have made a record unequalled by any other Governor since the Civil War.

The Governor's suggestion as to the amelioration of the conditions of women and children in our factories is also good. He takes a sound position when he says that it is far better to lose an industry than to have in our midst a condition like a running sore and a source of evil contagion. There is no need of losing industries in Massachusetts. That cry of "wool" has been raised by our manufacturers for the last fifty years against every labor law. All the legislation which has resulted in the improvement of the condition of labor has brought also its own compensation in the superior efficiency of our Massachusetts working men and women.

The AMERICAN cannot agree with Governor McCall's suggestion as to the reduction of the Public Service

NOT A PLEASANT WORD--BUT

If only the young man could hear that "Don't" and obey it as he did when he was a child!

All through his boyhood the young man has heard the warnings:

"Don't fall down. Don't eat too fast.

"Don't play too hard. Don't stay late.

"Don't get your feet wet. Don't play with bad boys,

"Don't forget to brush your teeth," and so on indefinitely.

All of those "Don'ts" were more or less irritating, but they took him through his boyhood safely.

If only the same authority and the same affection could give him the biggest "Don't" of all, the one that he needs now!

More Truth Than Poetry

By James J. Montague

The Old Fogies

WHEN Shakespeare, who had not the time to think about his art, dashed off "to be or not to be" to fatten Hamlet's part,

He never dreamed that he had spoiled a most tremendous scene.

For poets make a frightful break who say just what they mean. Had Bill been wise to modern dope he would have changed that speech.

To read as does the one below--and made the play a peach.

TO be--it's but, on the other hand--

Existence, so to speak, as opposed to oblivion--

Dark oblivion as some have it, though

Others prefer light, or medium for oblivion, like beer is, but what matters

What it is so long as it's there?

Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to Suffer the slings and arrows--sharp, keen, piercing

Shot by Indians--Arrows, arrows, not bows but arrows--

And, speaking of arrows, there is conscience, which makes Countless of us all. However, we were not speaking of arrows, but

Soft the fair Ophelia--the fair Ophelia!

And--but we are at an end.

WHEN Shelley heard that skylark sing up somewhere in the sky

And took his little quill in hand to make the stanza fly,

He thought that just plain English verse was adequately strong

To make that bird immortal for that morning's burst of song.

Poor, grovelling, dullard Shelley was--if he had lived today,

He would have made his tribute in this zippy modern way.

HAIL--to thee, Blithe spirit,

Who art I to call thee bird?

How, in fact, do I know that thou art a bird?

A bird by any other name--an owl, a crow,

Even a duck, which waddles quackingly;

Not to say a Hen, like Lady Eglantine, but this bites into

The Soul--this is pain, poignant, pitiful pain

That paralyzes--is I saying spirit? What spirit? Brandy is a

Spirit--so is wood alcohol, though it is said to be

Attended with serious consequences when taken into the human system. But I digress.

Art--that it is--premeditated art, with malice aforethought.

That is the only art--and in this day and generation

We can get away with it without going to the jug--which,

After all, is something.

Commission from five to three members and its return to the toothless status of the old Railroad Commission. Undoubtedly the Telephone Company would like this change. Undoubtedly the railroads and the street railways would like it. A commission that has no teeth and feels its helplessness is just the kind of a commission that the public service corporations want to have attempting to regulate them.

Its failure would be as inevitable as the failure of the old Railroad Commission to guard the people of Massachusetts and the stockholders of the New Haven from the depredations of the New Haven Railroad monopoly, and as its failure to prevent the mismanagement and looting of the Boston & Maine to the injury and distress of the people of Massachusetts and Northern New England, both passengers and shippers, and stockholders of the Boston & Maine, and as its failure to prevent the reckless and unlawful consolidations of the Bay State Street Railway, which has now brought that railway to its knees, to the loss of the public in service and to the loss of the stockholders of the profitable parts of the Bay State system in order that insiders might get promoters' and vendors' profits.

The Governor wisely does not absolutely recommend this disarming of the Public Service Commission. He suggests it for the consideration of the Legislature, and there it undoubtedly will die.

The AMERICAN does not suggest for a moment that Governor McCall had any ulterior purpose in his recommendation concerning the Public Service Commission. He simply does not know the magnitude of the work of regulating these public service corporations in Massachusetts and its difficulty and the cost of it. Governor McCall spent nearly all of his public life in Washington, but the AMERICAN predicts that six months in the Governor's chair will change his views most radically on this question.

The Governor's obvious lack of intimate knowledge of the details of State affairs leads us to suggest that he ought to guard himself very carefully against the advice and suggestions of people with ulterior motives, particularly while he is as yet unsophisticated in the details of State government.

The ways of the special interests in Massachusetts are calculated ways and they leave very little trail behind them. Many a suggestion is made to a public official in a most intimate and trusted friend who has not a disinterested motive and many a suggestion is innocently transmitted to a public official in this State by a vain though intimate friend who does not know that he received the suggestion in turn from a most interested and calculating source. Vanity in some men is as weak an approach for the special interests as cupidity in others. Let Governor McCall beware of both kinds of friends and acquaintances.

"If all men could see with you, but none too much; if neither foe nor loving friend can hurt you."

The rest of the message the AMERICAN will discuss on another day.

On the whole a comparison of Governor McCall's message with those of his last Republican predecessors will show how much Massachusetts has progressed in the quality of her Governors in the last five years.

How to Avoid the Grip

By Woods Hutchinson, M. D.

The World's Best Known Writer on Medical Subjects.

REMEMBER you are not doing much for the world by "holding in" a sneeze. The only effect of a grip attack is more sneezing in the sneezer and more sneezers among the sneezed at.

A sneeze has some small degree of utility when it is caused mechanically by dust, or smoke, or irritating fumes, in the way of dislodging the intruders and setting up a protective flow of mucus.

But a sneeze during the grip, or, for the matter of that, in any ordinary so-called "common cold," has no such value, because the irritant that causes it, the virus of the grip germ and its toxins, are already underneath the membranes and all through the blood.

In fact, a sneeze, unless it be clearly due to a whiff of dust, or smoke, or pungent odor, is not a sign that you are catching cold, but that you have already caught it, usually twenty-four to forty-eight hours before, and that it is beginning to break out on you.

The indignant rejoinder will rise at once to a score of lips, "I know better--haven't I sat in a draft and sneezed and come down with a cold at once many a time?" But this is simply a familiar fallacy of logic technically known as "Post hoc propter hoc," or whatever the name of the thing is caused by it.

For every time that they have sat in a draft and sneezed and caught cold they have at least five and probably ten times sat in a draft, seen men who have gone to bed and "watch their death of cold," and nothing whatever has come of it. The sneeze, coincident or not, is numbered for good and sufficient reasons the less harmless ones.

If anyone is loaded with infection to the bursting point and just ready
